HISTORY OF INSTITUTION (678) ? + [trash] ▾

History of institution

The National Library of Greece was established by the decree, issued on 15 May 1832 in Nafplio, under the name "Public Library" and with the director Gennadios, which was titled "Epistatos". In 1834 the National Library comes to Athens, which is the capital of the Greek state, and its collection grows rapidly, thanks not only to the markets but also to the donations of books by individuals. In 1842 it is consolidated with the Library of the University of Athens and is housed at the University. In 1866, with a royal decree, the two libraries are merged and the new entity will be named "National Library of Greece". In 1903, the National Library of Greece was transferred from the oldest building of the University to Vallianeio building, where it was housed continuously until 2017. In 2018 the National Library of Greece moves to the new phase of its operation at the premises of the Stavros Foundation Cultural Center Niarchos.
